

The House of Commons has adopted, by one hundred and eighty against one hundred and seventy votes, a motion brought forward by Mr. J. H. Duffell, Liberal M. P., for the Kirkcaldy Burghs, in favour of creating a Home Rule Legislature for Scotland. Sir G. Trevelyan personally supported the motion.

Mr. Wigram, Conservative candidate, has been elected for Remond by a diminished majority of five hundred votes.

The Hon. A. G. Brand, Liberal candidate, has been re-elected for North Wiltshire, Cambridge, but his majority remains unchanged.

At the Penang Convention held at Dublin, a resolution was passed that it was the duty of Nationalists to force a dissolution of Parliament. The despatches that passed between Lord Lansdowne, as Viceroy, and Lord Kimberley, as Secretary of State for India, regarding Council Bills have been published. On the 27th of August last, and again on the 20th of September, the Viceroy asked permission to sell a quantity of uncoloured silver in the Indian market, because it was unobtainable to add to circulation by coining it. Lord Kimberley, in reply, refused, as it would depress silver to raise the value of rupees. A series of despatches on the question of a minimum rate for Council Bills then followed. The Viceroy, on the 7th and 12th February, strongly urged the Secretary of State to declare a minimum for the next two months; otherwise he feared commercial difficulties would arise. Lord Kimberley declined to accede, and believed that imports would be stimulated more than exports if a minimum was announced.

PARIS, April 14th. Another Anarchist outbreak took place to-day, a bomb having been placed in a flower pot at the Restaurant Folio, opposite the Senate; a terrific explosion followed, and the people were seriously injured and much damage was done to property in the neighbourhood. Two arrests have been made of suspected persons.

The Sanitary Convention has been adjourned.

LONDON, April 15th.

Later accounts of the bomb outbreak in Paris yesterday, at the Restaurant Folio, state that the force of the explosion was most terrific, and smashed the windows of the Senate, besides hundreds of windows elsewhere in the neighbouring streets. The Anarchist named Meunier, who was implicated in the explosion at the Café Vercy in Paris in 1892, has been arrested in London on suspicion of being implicated in the present outbreak; he made a most desperate resistance when arrested by the police to-day.

APRIL 16th. In the House of Commons last night, Mr. Macfarlane asked whether the Government of India would be permitted to impose duties for revenue purposes upon colored printed cottons. Mr. Fowler in reply said that no proposal regarding Indian Import Duties was now before the Government.

Mr. Caldwell, Liberal candidate, has been elected for Mid-Lancashire by a majority of three hundred and thirty, replacing Mr. Phillips, resigned.

The House of Commons has passed the East London Water Works Bill by a majority of one vote against the Government, whose majority in the debate last night on the motion for adjournment of the Bill to create a grand committee for Scotch Affairs sank to eighteen. Fifteen Parliaments and several Anti-Parliamentaries were absent and not polled.

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF THE SHANGHAI VOLUNTEERS.

The annual inspection of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps took place on Saturday the 14th inst. at the Race-course in the presence of a considerable number of spectators. The corps numbered 229 of all ranks, under the command of Major Morrison, and were as follows:

Staff—Major Morrison, Capt.-Com. Laning, Sergt.-Major A. T. Todd.

Medical Staff—Surgeon-Lieut. Miles and Lalcaia, Veterinary Surgeon-Lieut. Whiteley.

Chaplain—Rev. H. C. Hodges.

Light Horse—Capt. Liddell, Lieut. Souter and Wedemeyer, 29 N.C. officers and men.

Artillery—Capt. Clive, Lieut. Sisson and Rex, 47 N.C. officers and men with 4 guns.

Engineers—Capt. Dowdall, Lieut. Brutton and Miller, 31 N.C. officers and men with 2 machine guns.

Infantry—A Co.—Capt. Deacon, Lieut. Wingrove and Gumpert, 20 N.C. officers and men.

B Co.—Capt. Anderson, Lieut. Trueman and Clifton, 36 N.C. officers and men.

German Co.—Lieut. Haupt, 35 N.C. officers and men.

D Co.—Capt. Sena, Lieut. Pereira, and 20 N.C. officers and men.

Band—Bandmaster Vela and 28 bandmen.

After thoroughly inspecting the ranks and putting the various branches of the Corps through a series of drill and field evolutions, Lieut. Colonel Jerrard, D.A.A.G., who had been deputized by Major-General Digby Barker to make the inspection, addressed the Corps as follows:

Major Morrison, officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Shanghai Volunteers, I shall be able to report very favourably to the Council on your performance to-day. I think that you have made very good use of your month's training, and everything shows that the officers have thoroughly understood what they had to teach. I purposely refrained from giving any orders as to what each unit should perform as I wished to see exactly what the officers left to themselves would make their men do. I was very glad to see no indicative movements were attempted, but that you confined yourselves to movements which might have been done in the face of the enemy, and did those movements very fairly well. I was very glad to see you have a bridge. Last year it was a point to which attention was drawn, that the Engineers were not provided with proper tools, and had no bridge suited to the country. Now they have got that bridge and can use it very well. There were one or two things in the attack I should like to draw attention to. Some of the companies exposed themselves rather more than they need have done, and with regard to the first charge of the Light Horse, that river having been bridged, you should not have availed yourselves of your local knowledge that you could charge across it. It having been bridged was a sign you could not cross, at any rate for the day, and the bridge being there the charge should not have been made. The drill, generally, has been very good, and I shall have much pleasure in saying so when making my report to the Council.

Major Morrison in a few words thanked the inspecting officer for his remarks, and three hearty cheers having been given for Lieut. Colonel Jerrard, the Volunteers returned to the Band, whence they were dismissed after a few complimentary observations from Major Morrison, and a good deal of mutual cheering.

CROWN COLONY GRIEVANCES.

Exception has been taken to the statement in our issue of March 29th last, that "the people of Penang (or rather that section which makes the noise) clamour for separate government, and protest against the way in which Singapore, a free movement, is taking the lead more and more."

What they want is a separate lieutenant-governor and secretary under a joint administration for the whole of the Straits Settlements and Native States. There certainly was, a few months ago a cry of "Home Rule for Penang," and for a time this heading was frequently used in the Straits papers; but now wiser counsels have prevailed. The Penang Gazette publishes a "Short Programme" which appears very reasonable; and several of its later proposals might advantageously be adopted in Hongkong. The present demands comprise:—

1.—Adequate representation.

2.—The restitution to Penang of the official status which was recently taken from her, and the reappointment of a duly empowered Lieutenant-Governor with a Secretary.

3.—The devotion to the facilities for Penang trade of such a sum as a due apportionment justifies and the necessities require.

4.—An arrangement by which Singapore shall be debited with her fair share of the maintenance of and provision for Province Wellesley and the Districts, in the same way that Penang contributes to the wants of Malacca.

5.—The consolidation of the Settlements and the Native States by a joint administration, consisting of 22 officials and 25 unofficial members, representing every settlement and state.

6.—The carrying on of the business of the joint Legislative Council in Session sitting from day to day for four days a week until the session is closed.

7.—Sessions of the Council to be held alternately in Singapore and Penang.

8.—The necessary judicial reform in the Native States.

9.—The apportionment of the Military Contribution so that the Native States shall pay their fair share.

10.—The institution of a standard British coin of fixed value.

11.—The institution of a system of recruiting agricultural immigrants of suitable classes "sufficient to the increasing wants of the area under administration."

12.—The extensive development of the whole area under administration.

13.—Regular weekly postal communication between Penang and England.

14.—Regular inter-settlement postal communication.

The qualifications for unofficial members of the Legislative Council to be:—

1st.—That they be elected.

2nd.—That they be British subjects not under 30 years of age.

3rd.—Residence anywhere within the area under administration, for a period of not less than five years.

4th.—That they have no disability which would deprive them under the present regulations. The qualifications for electors to be:—

1st.—That they be British subjects of not less than 25 years of age.

2nd.—Residence within the area administered, or sailing regularly between ports in the area administered, for a period of not less than three years.

3rd.—Must read, write and understand English.

4th.—Must show that they are earning or have earned not less than $150 per month or are possessed of property to the value of $150 per month.

THE FATE OF MOROMI.

Moromi was a Jap. He had been discharged from a ship at Singapore, and he was wandering, without a cent, about the boarding-house quarter of the town, by the Tanjong Pagar Dock, when he met a Goshing (clerk), who told him that he could get him a nice, easy job "over there," and he gave his brown army knickerbockers, for his geographical knowledge was of the vaguest. "In Australia, you'll make plenty of money," he continued; "eight dollars a month, and you'll be able to steal plenty of pearls—and by-and-bye you can become a diver, and make a lot of money. Come along with me."

Moromi went, in a patient, uncomplaining fashion, and soon found himself amongst a crowd of Malays, Manila-men, Japs, Chinamen, and sundry other creatures, in the emigration office. Each man in turn was taken to the counter and gave a name—it didn't matter what. The name was badly mis-spelt on a sheet, and without the slightest knowledge of to whom he was engaged, and with but a very hazy idea of the work he was to do or the country he was going to, the man had signed away his services for two years. He was given an advance-note for a month's wages, and was then marched down to a shed by the water-side, to which his bedding and clothing if he had any, which was seldom, were brought from his boarding-house. The advance-note, by the way, was usually appropriated by the "boarding-master" for the previous keep of his rightful owner.

Two days afterwards Moromi, with the other men, was hurried on board a steamer and told he could camp where he liked on the cattle-deck. About 20 days later the steamer reached the West Australian coast and anchored in the midst of a flotilla consisting of some 20 schooners and about a couple of hundred smaller craft. This place was the pearling ground.

Moromi, with five other Japs for company, was given charge of the deck of a schooner. He was taken into the cabin and made to affix his mark to the vessel's articles. The next day he was put on board a lugger where his work consisted in turning an air-pump all day long. He soon got tired of this occupation, however, and the diver of the boat, who was one of his own brown and cheerful fellow-countrymen, put him into the diving-dress and told him how to go to the bottom.

Moromi soon learned to dive, and after going through the intermediate stage of tender, was given charge of a lugger. He agreed, when he was promoted to the rank of diver, to procure shell, for which he was to be paid at the rate of £20 a ton. What constituted a ton was not exactly explained, but that didn't signify. As a matter of fact that alleged quantity opens and shuts like a telescope, according to circumstances, and means pretty nearly anything from 300wt. up to a pile half the size of a cathedral.

Three Saturdays later, Moromi went on board the schooner for "slop chest"—gin and other articles—which were retailed to him at 500 per cent., and more, above cost price. He took his diving-helmet with him.

"What's the matter?" demanded the manager.

"Face-glass he lost," returned Moromi.

The manager looked at the "face-glass," screwed it on, and briefly told him to go to the good old British School. "It's all right," he said; "if you come here with any of your carnation root I'll put another man in your scarlet boat!"

The manager was a forcible man and he meant it. The current of the Orient at command.

Moromi got a bit scared, for he wanted to make a pile—in his innocence he thought it possible to do so—and so he went back to his lugger. He got very drunk that night on unaccustomed liquors, and suffered a recovery on the following day.

On the Monday morning he went to work. He had hardly reached the bottom when the "tender" felt four pulls at the line which he held. The signal meant "Pull me up!" Something was evidently wrong, for the pump began flying round at top speed. There was a strong tide running at the time, and though the tender pulled, and pulled he didn't get an inch of the line in. The boat was anchored, and those on board saw a hundred fathoms astern, what looked like a huge porpoise darting in the water. The tender recognised the object as a diving-dress inflated with air, but as for hauling it in he might as well have hauled at a continent. After three hours' work with watch-tackles, they managed to bring the diver—or what had been the diver—alongside. They lifted him on board with the help of the derrick. The helmet was without a face-glass; it had fallen off while Moromi was on the bottom, and the man was drowned by the water rushing on to his face through an aperture about six inches wide. When the matter was reported to the manager on the schooner he said to the tender, "Take him ashore and bury him!" In the schooner's log-book was entered under that day's date; "Moromi, diver, in lugger Alles Warner, drowned in dress." Nothing was said of the complaint made on the previous Saturday.

Was the manager tried for manslaughter? Oh, no! Nothing more was ever said about Moromi. The books showed that he was in debt to his employer, and there is a debit balance against his ghost to this day.—Honest George, in Sydney Bulletin.

MISS BELLWOOD'S NEW ROLE.

ARRAIGNED AS A PRISONER IN A "NASTY" COURT.

"I've played to better houses than this," said Miss Bessie Bellwood, glancing over the rows of nearly empty benches in the Jefferson Market Police-court, New York, the other afternoon, while she was waiting for her case to be called by Justice John J. Ryan. Then she emitted a peal of laughter that made the Justice glance up at her papers with a frown, while the clerks and court officers looked aghast.

Bessie was there to answer a charge of assault upon Little Crook, her maid, a slender little Englishwoman, who accused her of blackening her eye with a high-heeled shoe on February 11th.

Miss Bellwood wore a dashing pepper-and-salt dress, cut like a man's coat, revealing a lacy shirt with a standing collar, and a natty black silk bow. A heavy velvet coat of old gold colour trimmed with yellow fur magnified her generous proportions, and her yellow hair was drawn tightly back from a face, the bright pink glow of which may have been due to the snowstorm.

"I don't blame the girl, you know," she exclaimed in a loud voice at the group around her. "She never would have done it herself, but that nasty little lawyer put her up to it. He thinks I'll give her 500 dollars to compromise the suit, and he'll get it all, but I'd put it in a poor-box before I'd give them a cent."

Miss Crook was sworn, and her counsel, H. B. Saulsbury, asked her how long she had been employed by Miss Bellwood.

"Three years," she replied.

"It was four years, Lizzie," interrupted her former mistress.

"Yes, I believe it was four," assented the maid, who then alleged, with frequent interruptions by the defendant, that Miss Bellwood, in retaliation for an imputed assault, had assaulted her, first with her open hand, then with her fist, and finally with a shoe.

At this stage of the proceedings Miss Bellwood declared that she was going home, but when she got as far as the gate two policemen caused her to change her mind. Her interruptions became so frequent later that her lawyer, Mr. Barrett, threatened to throw up the case. Then, when the crowd pressed forward and shoved Lawyer Saulsbury against her, she turned on him with blazing eyes, and gave him a thrust in the stomach with her right arm.

Two policemen seized Bessie, and told her "if she did not keep still she would be locked up. This had a soothing effect, and when she took the stand in her own defence she was comparatively calm. Her story was a general denial of the maid's testimony, in which she explained that she only pushed the plaintiff, who fell against the door and blackened her eye.

Justice Ryan held her in for the Special Sessions, and, after shaking hands with the reporters, nodding jauntily at the justice, and glancing at the "bobbies," she swept out into the snowstorm. The case came on for trial some days later in the week, and after some of the evidence had been taken, Miss Bessie was allowed to go scot-free.

THE WILD CAT COLUMN.

A while ago, when the reconstruction was finished and the glad tidings had just gone forth that confidence was restored, a man went round most of the Sydney banks asking for an advance on the security of a N. S. W. Govt. voucher for several thousands, payable a month or two ahead. He met with a unanimous refusal. The banks wanted other people to have confidence in them, but they were so convinced of their own and each other's unreliability, and had so little confidence in themselves, and possessed so thorough a conviction of what might happen when the solitary hawk by which the sword was suspended broke, that they wouldn't lend even on the security of a Government voucher—the same Government which was going security for them and saving them from immediate destruction.

Considering the wallings of English financial authorities about the weakness of Australian banks, it is interesting to note that the reserves of the big English banks are all imminently liquid, and far below even the Australian standard. The huge National Provincial, with 42 millions of deposits, has a cash reserve of 12 per cent. The London and County (deposits, 33 millions) has 11 per cent; Lloyd's (4 millions) has 12 per cent; and the Capital and Counties (with nearly 12 millions of deposits) has only 11 per cent cash reserve. The rest of the big banks average about 14 per cent, while many of the Australian banks go as high as 40 per cent. But for the fact that the Bank of England to support them in times of stress, and that the Bank of England has the State to fall back upon, the English banks would, before this, have made the grandest financial smash on record.

"Look here, Abraham, I can't possibly meet that bill due to-morrow. Hold it over for a day or two, will you?" "Mein Gott, friend, I would be delighted to do it, but the fact is, I'm in difficulties myself, and had to dig out your bill me a friend; put I'll tell you all I'll do (as you are an old customer of mine) I'll see if I can't arrange for you at a drill!" "What price, Abraham?" "Well, it's 15 per cent, and do your best." Arrangement made, and borrower pays 50 per cent. for renewal to third party and 25 per cent. to the original lender as commission. It may be hard to believe, but this is what one of the 'cutest' men in Melbourne did last week without tumbling to the solemn fact that Abraham (the original lender) still held his (the borrower's) bill, and simply set up the mythical third party as holder of the document to get an extra 25 per cent.

"As shown by the books," makes the auditor's certificate absolutely worthless as a safeguard for the shareholders and depositors. Almost all balance sheets, from that of the Bank of the East to the Bank of the South, down to the private account of the General Banks and the Abigail pawnshop, are, and have been, all right "as shown by the books." The auditors are that the Q.N.B.'s accounts are likewise as well of interest as the assurance that it is going to be wet when it rains. The question at issue—the question above all others which the auditors are (or should be) paid to answer—is whether the books themselves are all right. And the auditors of the Q.N.B. in two successive balance sheets, have carefully inserted a saving clause which practically disclaims all responsibility for the books. Also, they do not even say that they have counted the cash, or examined, or valued, or so much as seen, the securities. They merely say, boldly, that the figures in the balance sheet are the same as those in the books, therefore if the books are all right the balance sheet is right, and if the books happen to represent bid or doubtful or depreciated securities or unreliable overdrafts as good, then the sheet does likewise.

The Queensland Deposit Bank, which burst and reconstructed two years ago, has collapsed for the second time and proposes to reconstruct some more. A board of eminently respectable directors told a flattering tale of the absolute solvency of the institution, and how it only wanted a little time to rise up like a strong bank refreshed and pay everybody in full. On the strength of these statements it arranged to settle up by protracted instalments. The first of these fell due last week, and, despite the two years' breathing time, the mortgage establishment has failed to pay, even this preliminary trifling. A good many other reconstructed institutions will go the same way when the instalments begin to fall due. In every case the board declared that its particular bank was solid till the day of the collapse. Then the same board gave its unsupported affidavit that it was still sound and only wanted "time," and the shareholders accepted the assurance and didn't ask for an independent audit. Later on, as in the Queensland Deposit case, the same old board professed to be confident that the reconstructed concern was sound and solvent, and when the second burst came the same board would doubtless offer its own assurance, cordially endorsed by itself, that more time is the one thing needed. The public confidence in that same old arguing board is a touching circumstance.—Sydney Bulletin.
